

4:30 – 5:30 pm	Session 2A: Approaches to Longitudinal Analysis Presenters: Louis Rocconi and Allison BrckaLorenz Many institutions participate in NSSE regularly allowing for analyses of multiple years of NSSE data. This session explores the use of multiple years of data to assess changes in your students’ engagement scores over time. More specifically, this session will overview general considerations for using multiple years of NSSE data, merging multiple dataset together, recommended methods and models of longitudinal analyses, and solutions for challenges associated with longitudinal NSSE data. Participants are encouraged to share their goals for longitudinal assessment and how NSSE multi-year results are being or could be used on their campus. Session 2B: High-Impact Practices: What’s all the Hype? Presenter: Jillian Kinzie Abstract: Promising “high-impact” activities, including first-year seminars, common intellectual experiences, learning communities, service learning, writing-intensive courses, collaborative assignments and projects, undergraduate research, study abroad & other experiences with diversity, internships, and capstone courses and projects, have been recognized for their potential to enrich undergraduate education. In this session we'll review what we’ve learned about these practices, how students benefit, and how institutions have emphasized the assessment of high-impact practices. Participants will explore their new HIP reports and consider ways to start conversations on campus around HIP practices. Session 2C: One-on-One Consultations – 15-minute sessions Bob Gonyea and Jim Cole	LANG 256 Center Room LANG 241 CD LANG 241 B

Presenters: Jillian Kinzie and Alexander McCormick; Kathleen Harring Muhlenberg College, and Rita Liu and Kevork Horissian, Bucknell University The ultimate goal of NSSE is not to gather data. It is to catalyze improvement in undergraduate education. What fosters the shift from data to action? This session provides an opportunity to practice applying NSSE results, learn about approaches taken by two NSSE institutions to make effective use of results, and to discuss strategies for action. Please be prepared to share your NSSE challenges and successes, and ask questions!	LANG 256 Center Room

10:00-11:00 am	Session 3A: Using BCSSE and NSSE to Help Retention Efforts Presenters: Jim Cole and Louis Rocconi Retaining students is a key initiative for institutions. This session will highlight how to incorporate BCSSE and NSSE data to help inform your institutions retention efforts. In this session we will discuss research findings relating engagement and retention as well as explore ways in which NSSE and BCSSE data can be used to supplement retention efforts on your campus. We will also highlight examples of how other institutions have used their NSSE and BCSSE data in their retention plans. Finally, we will encourage participants to think of their own retention efforts and how they might use their NSSE or BCSSE to help improve their efforts. Session 3B: NSSE and Accreditation and Improvement Presenter: Jillian Kinzie The most commonly reported use of NSSE results is for accreditation. NSSE's Accreditation Toolkits, designed for all regional and several specialized associations, map NSSE items to accreditation requirements and standards. This session will highlight the relationship between NSSE and accreditation, illustrate how items map to accreditation standards and discusses the potential for using NSSE data in institutional self-studies and quality improvement plans. Session 3C: One-on-One Consultations – 15-minute sessions Bob Gonyea, Allison BrckaLorenz and Alex McCormick	LANG 256 Center Room LANG 241 CD LANG 241 B
